PREFACE

Madagascar and Adjacent Islands: A Guide to Official Publications, the eleventh in the series of guides to documents of African countries being compiled in the African Section of the Library of Congress, covers materials dating from the establishments of French administrations in Madagascar, the Comoro Islands, and Réunion, and British administrations in Mauritius and Seychelles. The terminal date for entries in the Madagascar section of the bibliography is October 1958, the date of the establishment of the Malagasy Republic; for the other islands, entries have been continued to the present date. This guide includes publications of local governments and a selection of documents issued by the French and British Governments relating to their respective possessions. Many of the titles listed are held by the Library of Congress and other American libraries represented in the National Union Catalog. Locations are indicated by call numbers for cataloged works in the Library of Congress collections, by the symbol DLC for uncataloged materials, and by the National Union Catalog symbol "or works held by other American libraries (see "Symbols," p. vii).

Information on titles not located in American libraries has been gathered from French and British bibliographic records. Of these, the following have been particularly useful: the Bibliographie de la France (including Supplément A, E, and F); the Bibliographie sélective des publications officielles; the Monthly List of Official Colonial Publications; and guides compiled by Grandidier, Jaeglé (see "Sources Quoted," p. ix), and Toussaint. Toussaint's bibliography definitively covers the official Mauritian publications and British documents relating to Mauritius for the period 1810-1954. For that period, therefore, only those publications of the Mauritius Government and those British documents on Mauritius held in American libraries are recorded here.

The present guide is arranged in two main parts. The first records publications of the French administrations in Madagascar (1896-1958), the Comoro Islands, and Réunion, and selected material on these islands issued by the metropolitan government in Paris. The second part includes sections on official publications of the British colonial administrations in Mauritius and Seychelles Islands and a selection of documents on these two administrations issued by Great Britain. Entries are listed alphabetically by author and title, except that the publications of the Mauritius and Seychelles Governments relating to censuses and development planning are grouped under these subject headings. Official publications by individuals and government-sponsored organizations are cited at the end of the various sections as "Other Authors." An index to authors and subjects appears at the end of the bibliography.

The position of the compiler of this guide was supported in part by the Carnegie Corporation of New York whose 5-year grant, made in 1959, enabled the Library of Congress to establish the African Section. The grant also provided funds for editorial and clerical assistance in the project.

MADAGASCAR, COMORO ISLANDS, and REUNION
HISTORICAL NOTE

French cultural, economic, and political influence in the western Indian Ocean is the product of more than three centuries of historical contact. In the 17th century, following the establishment of French trade with India, the Compagnie des Indes, the French chartered company operating in the Indian Ocean, established bases at Fort Dauphin and at other points on the southern coast of Madagascar in order to secure its trade routes. Although none of the bases was held for more than a few years at a time, French interest in Madagascar and its peoples continued into the 18th century, when French missionaries were active on the island. From these early contacts the governments of the Second Empire and the Third Republic gradually expanded French political influence over the entire island and the adjacent Comoro Islands.

Relations between the Third Republic and the Merina dynasty, which ruled Madagascar in the 19th century, were marred by repeated French efforts to bring the island within the French sphere of influence. In 1883 Paris revived an old claim to a protectorate over the northwest coast of Madagascar and bombarded the port of Tamatave to support its claim. As a result, the Merina sovereign, Queen Ranaivalona II, was forced to cede Diogo Suarez Bay and its environs to France and to accept French advice in the conduct of Merina foreign policy. In 1890 Anglo-French agreement, by which the British surrendered their claims to Madagascar, gave the Third Republic the opportunity to extend its control over the entire island. When the Merina Government refused a French demand in 1894 to surrender full authority over military affairs to France, a French expeditionary force seized the capital, Tananarive, and effectively established a protectorate over the island. In 1896, after an outbreak of anti-French revolts, Madagascar was declared a French colony. General Joseph S. Gallieni, who was sent to pacify the island, abolished the monarchy and instituted a French administration to replace that of the Merina dynasty.

Under the Third Republic, administrative power was concentrated in the hands of a Governor General in Tananarive, who was responsible to the Minister of Colonies in Paris and ultimately to the French parliament. Representatives of indigenous chiefs and local chambers of commerce served on the purely consultative Conseil Supérieur des Colonies in Paris and in advisory capacities to the Governor General in Tananarive. A few Malagasy (a collective term for the indigenous peoples of Madagascar), who had met the requirements for French citizenship, had the right to vote in French elections. The island's government supported the Vichy regime in 1940, but 2 years later Madagascar was occupied by British forces to prevent a possible Japanese invasion and the administration was subsequently turned over to the Free French forces of General Charles de Gaulle.

World War II and its consequences produced dramatic changes in French colonial policy. A first step toward self-government in the island was taken at the Brazzaville Conference in 1944, when the French Government promised peoples in the colonies a larger voice in their own affairs. A representative assembly for the island and assemblies for each of its five provinces were created by an administrative reorganization of November 9, 1946. The island's assembly had control over the general colonial budget and the provincial assemblies had similar authority over provincial budgets. In addition, enfranchised Malagasy were given the right to elect delegates to the French parliament and to the consultative assembly of the newly established French Union.

Gradually, as subsequent legislation broadened the franchise and removed restrictions on labor organizations, there was an acceleration of political activity and mounting pressure for greater autonomy. On June 23, 1956, the French National Assembly met some of the demands by passing the loi-cadre (enabling law). This established universal suffrage for all men and women over 21 and expanded the powers of both the Conseil de Gouvernement (executive council) and the Assemblée Représentative. In 1958 the Fifth Republic gave voters in Madagascar the choice of immediate independence or full autonomy and partnership in a new Community. The island's electorate gave its overwhelming approval to the constitution of the Community, and the autonomous Malagasy Republic was established. Two years later, on June 26, 1960, France recognized the Republic's complete independence.

The Comoro Islands (Archipel des Comores) in the Mozambique Channel to the north of Madagascar had close political ties with its southern neighbor for almost a half century before the establishment of the Malagasy Republic. The first French foothold in the archipelago was the island of Mayotte, which was ceded to the Orléanist government by the local sultan in 1841. Sultans of the other principal islands in the group, Anjouan, Grand Comore, and Mohéli, accepted French protection in 1886. By 1912 all of the islands had been declared colonies of France, and in 1914 the whole archipelago was placed under the authority of the Governor General of Madagascar. As part of the post-World War II reforms in French colonies, the Comoro Islands were given administrative autonomy

* In 1924 the islands of Saint Paul and Nouvelle Amsterdam, the Kerguelon and Crozet archipelagos, and Terre Adélie in Antarctica were also placed under the authority of the Governor General of Madagascar. A separate administration for these territories, called collectively Terris Australes et Antarctiques Françaises, was established in 1955, with the seat of government at Port-aux-Français in the Kerguelon Archipelago.

from Madagascar by a decree of May 9, 1946, and a separate legislative assembly, the Conseil Général (later superseded by the Assemblée Territoriale), was established. In 1958 voters in the archipelago chose to retain the islands' existing status as an overseas territory of the Fifth Republic, and they continue to send representatives to the French parliament. Full internal autonomy was granted to the Comoros in 1961.

Réunion, approximately 400 miles east of Madagascar, has been under French control almost continuously for more than 300 years. In the 17th century the Compagnie des Indes established permanent settlements on Bourbon (the name of Réunion until 1848) for the purpose of cultivating coffee and sugar. Under the Ancien Régime the island became the base for French expansion to the east and north, and French settlers from Réunion founded colonies on Mauritius and Rodrigues and in the Seychelles--islands which subsequently came under British control. Réunion was occupied by the British in 1810 but was returned to the restored Bourbon Government of Louis XVIII in 1815. It remained a colony of France until 1946, when it was raised to the status of an overseas department. In this position, it sends three elected representatives to the National Assembly in Paris and two to the Senate.

MAURITIUS AND SEYCHELLES HISTORICAL NOTE

In the late 18th and early 19th centuries, the British effectively challenged the French position in the western Indian Ocean, establishing their political control over the French colonists of Mauritius and Seychelles. Mauritius, settled by the Dutch in 1598 but abandoned 12 years later, came under French control in 1715. Settlers from Bourbon (Réunion) arrived in 1722 and were soon followed by colonists sent to the island by the Compagnie des Indes. The Compagnie governed Ile de France (the name given to the island by the French) until 1767, when the administrative functions were assumed by the French Government. Apart from a brief period during the French Revolution when the colonial assembly ruled independently of Paris, the island was under the authority of the central government until the time of the Napoleonic Wars. Mauritius played a major role in the Franco-British contest for control of the Indian Ocean in the early 19th century, as its ports served as bases for French men-of-war and privateers. In retaliation the British seized the island in 1810, and their possession of Mauritius and of Rodrigues, 300 miles to the east, was recognized by France in the Treaty of Paris of 1814.

Mauritius and its dependencies (including Rodrigues, Diego Garcia, and smaller islands) were given the status of a Crown Colony under a Governor in Port Louis. By a constitutional reform of 1885, elected representatives of the local population were permitted to take part in sessions of the Council of Government, the Colony's consultative body. In 1948 this Council was replaced by a Legislative Council, which has broad powers over colonial affairs. The ministerial system was introduced in 1957, with the ministers responsible to both the Governor and the Legislative Council for the affairs of their respective departments and ministries.

Seychelles, the collective name of a group of islands approximately 1,000 miles north of Mauritius, was colonized by France in the middle of the 18th century.¹ The objective of the French Government was to establish a colony of spice plantations in order to enable France to compete more successfully with the Netherlands in the European spice markets. During the Napoleonic Wars the islands were seized by British naval forces, and in 1810 they were placed under the authority of the Governor of Mauritius. From 1811 to 1838 Seychelles was governed by Civil Agents and Civil Commissioners responsible to the government in Port Louis. A first step toward administrative autonomy came in 1872, when a Board of Civil Commissioners with full responsibility for financial affairs was established in the islands. This was followed in 1888 by the creation of the office of Administrator of Seychelles and the introduction of Executive and Legislative Councils. In 1897 the Administrator assumed the functions of governor of the islands, and in 1903 he was officially raised to the rank of Governor, and Seychelles became a Crown Colony separate from Mauritius. The first semblance of representative government came in 1948, when an elected element was introduced into the Legislative Council.

¹Seychelles includes Mahé (the location of the capital, Victoria), Praslin, Silhouette, La Digue, Amirantes, the Cosmoledo Group, and smaller islands.

(HAUT COMMISSARIAT)

Note: Works in this section are issued by the Government of Madagascar (1896-1958). Many documents carry on title pages Gouvernement général de Madagascar et dépendances, or Haut commissariat de la République française à Madagascar et dépendances, and very often both designations; both are here understood. Unless otherwise indicated, documents with Madagascar as the author are published by the Imprimerie officielle in Tananarive (1896-97, called the Imprimerie nationale).

Ministère d'état chargé des départements et territoires d'outre-mer.

Note: French government bodies directly concerned with the administration of overseas possessions, c. 1848-1964: Under the Second Republic, colonial affairs were the responsibility of the Direction des colonies of the Ministère de la marine. In 1858, the Government of the Second Empire placed the Direction under the newly-created Ministère de l'Algérie et des colonies. It was reunited with the Ministère de la marine in 1860 and was made part of the Ministère de commerce et des colonies in 1881. In 1882, it was again attached to the Ministère de la marine. Constituted an "autonomous administration" in 1889, it was placed under the Ministère de commerce et de l'industrie in 1889. Once again, in 1892, it was attached to the Ministère de la Marine and was placed again under the Ministère de commerce et de l'industrie later that year. In 1894, the Administration des colonies (the successor of the Direction des colonies) was raised to ministerial level.

The Ministère des colonies was responsible for colonial affairs from 1894 to 1946, when it was superseded by the Ministère de la France d'outre-mer. Beginning in 1959, this ministry was gradually dissolved and many of its functions were assumed by agencies attached to the office of the Premier Ministre. In 1960, affairs of the overseas departments and territories (e.g., Réunion and the Comoro Islands) were the responsibility of the Ministère d'état chargé du Sahara, des départements et territoires d'outre-mer; the name was changed to its present form apparently in 1962.

FRENCH UNION

French Union

Note: The French Union, established by the French Constitution of 1946, bound together France, the overseas departments, overseas territories (including Madagascar and the Comoro Islands), associated territories and associated states. Its purpose was to guarantee the unity of the French world, while at the same time, encouraging local self-government. Each member territory sent representatives to the French parliament and to the Assembly of the French Union, a purely advisory body which met at Versailles. As a result of the 1958 referendum, the Union was replaced by the Community.
